

Friendship

'Friends are the siblings God never gave us, so the saying goes, and it is an undeniable truth. Friendship improves happiness and abates misery, by doubling our joy and dividing our grief. There are friends who are always vigilant for you and cherish the time you spend with them. Friendship is the most powerful relationship. Having said that it is physiologically proven that friends who stay with you for 7 years can last a lifetime. I remember once, I had a drama performance after school. The audience was vast, and I had forgotten my costume to perform in. Thinking back, I remember that my phone had died and there was no way to contact my parents to get me the costume for the performance. However, my close friend whom I have known since year 3 noticed the panicked look on my face and resolved the problem for me by calling my parents through his phone, which I had never thought of. Even nowadays we are still close friends, not even us being situated in different schools has made an impact on the bond which we have created between us. These are the types of friends that are with you even in the middle of a calamity where you might be getting scolded by a teacher. Friends who germinate a convivial relationship with you are like the branches of a tree.

A person is acquainted with many people in their life. However, the closest ones become our friends. You may have a large friend circle in school or college, but you know you can only count on one or two people with whom you share true friendships. True friends are the ones with whom we have a special bond of love and affection. In other words, having a true friend makes our lives easier and full of happiness. Friendship is important in life because it teaches us a great deal about life. We learn so many lessons from friendship that we won't find anywhere else. You learn to love someone other than your family. You know how to be yourself in front of friends. Friendship never leaves us in bad times. You learn how to understand people and trust others. Your real friends will always motivate you and cheer for you. They will take you on the right path and save you from any evil. Similarly, friendship also teaches you a lot about loyalty. It helps us to become loyal and get loyalty in return. There is no greater feeling in the world than having a friend who is loyal to you. Moreover, friendship makes us stronger. It tests us and helps us grow. For instance, we see how we fight with our friends yet come back together after setting aside our differences. This is what makes us strong and teaches us patience. Therefore, there is no doubt that best friends help us in our difficulties and bad times of life. They always try to save us in our dangers as well as offer timely advice.

Friendship

True friends are like the best assets of our life because they share our sorrow, soothe our pain, and make us feel happy. However, nowadays in this modern age, Our whole lives are shaped by throwaway comments and social programming. Since the evolution of social networking platforms, the definition of friend has changed a little. They're no longer people you know well. Virtual friendships have affected the way society labels friendship. We now call anyone a friend-even a person we met once on a night out. Unfortunately, many modern friendships aren't based on emotional support or a family-like connection. Strong friendships are built on a foundation of honesty and trust. Providing an honest perspective, repairing ruptures by apologising or sharing your feelings and consistently making time for people you care about are the pillars that support lifelong connections. I strongly believe, childhood friends are your true friends as no one in this world is rich enough to buy his own childhood and youth back. Only friends help to recreate those moments from time to time at no cost. Hence, "A true friend is like a four-leaf clover"; however, your best friends will always be the creme de la creme, the best of the best. Besides that, it adds to the truth that they should be selected judiciously.